Naughten: 'no new coup'

The Government is spending money "shoring up the Taoiseach's ailing popularity" at the expense of helping elderly people in County Roscommon. That was the claim made this week by Fine Gael Deputy Denis Naughten, who launched a strong attack on Fianna Fail and Mr. Cowen.

Meanwhile Deputy Naughten said that reported new tensions in his own party will be resolved. He was referring to outspoken comments by Deputy Lucinda Creighton who this week re-opened the wounds which are still very much in evidence within a Fine Gael party which recently publicly battled over the leadership of Enda Kenny (with Deputy Naughten amongst the leading 'rebels').

Deputy Naughten said that any tensions still remaining would be resolved - and it was clear that any battle cries he is issuing are aimed at Fianna Fail.

"This Government has set up a website giving a positive spin on its work at a cost of €40,000, the equivalent of over 2,250 home help hours. Only this month we have seen a situation where over €130,000 in funding for home support in County Roscommon is being held in a Galway office and now we see that €40,000, which could have been used to provide vital home help hours to elderly people, has been squandered trying to improve Brian Cowen's image with voters.

"If it is a choice between shoring up the Taoiseach's ailing popularity and allowing elderly people to remain in their own home then the decision should be simple but it would appear this is not the case for Fianna Fáil."
