Leyden says Dukes' role is 'inappropriate'

Senator Terry Leyden, Fianna Fáil Frontbench Spokesperson on European Affairs in the Seanad, this week called on Mr. Alan Dukes not to accept the role of Chairman of Anglo Irish Bank, stating that it went against the concept of 'public interest', which was the basis in which he first was appointed to the Board.

"I strongly believe that if Mr. Dukes were to remain as a Public Interest Director, he would have more freedom and flexibility to assess the challenges and actions of the Bank, and to remain at arm's length from the influences and pressures of a Chairman. Alan Dukes as Chairman will very much compromise his own independence, the very reason he is on the Board."

He added: "It is inappropriate for a public interest director to become chairman of Anglo Irish Bank. Alan Dukes should decide to consider his position now. I will write to the Minister to ask him to ask Mr. Dukes not to accept this position. He cannot be the poacher turned gamekeeper nor can he be neutral in a situation."
